

Financial Aid Package Revisions

Circumstances may require that a student's aid package be revised in the following cases:

- Change in enrollment

Students are awarded financial aid based on a full time estimate of enrollment. Awards are adjusted based on actual enrollment at the end of the add/drop period.

- Withdrawal from school

Students contemplating withdrawing from classes should make an appointment to see a financial aid counselor. The current semester's aid as well as future aid may be jeopardized.

- Receipt of other financial aid

This includes aid not awarded through the Office of Financial Aid, including institutional, state and private donor scholarships, tuition remission, and other aid that we become aware of after the student has been awarded.

- Change in residency status

Students who are granted in-state residency after they receive an award based on out-of-state residence will receive a budget adjustment, which reflects the in-state charges for tuition and fees. This may require an adjustment to aid awarded and/or received. In such cases, funds may be returned to the appropriate financial aid programs to prevent an over award.

- Federal verification process

Students who are selected for verification will need to submit documents, such as federal tax return transcripts (or import their tax information into the FAFSA), a verification worksheet etc to the RCC Office of Financial Aid. If documentation is required it will be listed on your MyRCC Financial Aid Documents list on MyRCC under the Financial Aid Tab. This information may require changes be made to the original FAFSA information, resulting in changes in eligibility.
